of the General Counsel's office accompanied two per semployees to New York where the two were to testify in the trial, a criminal action in the Federal courts for alleged pro-Japanese activity in POW camps during the war. The employees were to testify as to redordings which are being used in evidence. The made arrangements with the Department of Justice and the U. S. Attorney to limit any questions on the employees' present occupations and duties. On questioning in New York, one witness was excdused, the other took the stnad but no questions were addressed to him which would require release of classified information. There was excellent cooperation on the part of Justice and the U. S. Attorney.
